Author's Note

Letters

They tell me nothing but lies here and they think they can break my spirit. But I believe what I choose and say nothing. I am not as simple as I seem.

Katherine

My Lord and dear husband, I commend me unto you. The hour of my death draweth fast on, and my case being such the tender love I owe you forceth me, with a few words, to put you in remembrance of the health and safeguard of your soul which you ought to prefer before all worldly matters, and before the care and tenderness of your own body, for the which you have cast me into many miseries and your self into many cares... For my part I do pardon you all, yea, I do wish and devoutly pray God that He will pardon you.

Lastly, I make this vow, that mine eyes desire you above all things.
Farewell.

Katherine of Aragon
